NOWU, the Tiny Toronto Hospital Union

A Sketchy History

- Its two key people, Tim Oribine and Matt Laframboise, used to work for the Service Employees International Union (SEIU).
- But SEIU says they left with a multi-year backlog of grievances and no follow-through for members.
- SEIU President Sharleen Stewart described Tim Oribine to the Toronto Star as “incompetent.” bit.ly/3jmWMnB

Wait, there's more:

- NOWU's main gig is trying to take members from other unions.
- It can't even get that right.
- NOWU recently filed an application to displace LiUNA at St. Michael's Hospital. The application was so error-filled that it was thrown out by the Ontario Labour Relations Board (OLRB).

Steve Rosso

recently retired after 25 years as a union member

Our USW pension is secure and safe. Upon my retirement, Manion Wilkins answered my questions and helped me every step of the way. Without the collective agreement and the pension plan the Steelworkers bargained for, retirement would be a lot different for me and I would most likely still be working.
